

In our example, we only had three data points, so the math didn't take very long…

…but when you have millions of data points, it can take a long time.

So there is a thing called Stochastic Gradient Descent
that uses a randomly selected subset of the data at every step rather than the full dataset.